Fire at Trinidad

Special to the Gazette

Trinidad, Colo., May 26.—A fire at 10.30 to-night completely gutted the building at 14 Sixteenth street and the fine stock of milinery owned by Mrs. McKinney was a total loss. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Horrible Accident.

Denver, May 26.—A special from Breckinridge says: The most horrible accident in the mining history of Summit county occurred this morning at the Little Corporal mine in which three men lost their lives. The accident was caused by bad air. Two men have been taken out and a force of men are working to recover the third body. The names of those recovered are J. C. Derks and H. Benson. The body of W. J. Barkhe is still in the mine.

HE GAVE HIS LIFE

A terrible accident occurred about 9 o'clock this morning at the Little Corporal mine near this place, by which three men—William Barkhe, John Derks and B. Benson—lost their lives. Their deaths resulted from foul air. It appears that a drift has been driven from the main shaft and a raise was made from the drift to intersect an old shaft above. This incline has been known to have bad air for some time. It is supposed that when the raise was made through the men were at once overcome with the rush of foul air and killed. Derks and Elmer Miller were found by Benson in the bottom of the raise, both insensible, and he had Miller out and returned for Derks only to pay the forfeit of his own life for his [illegible]. Barkhe's body was reached about 2 o'clock today. Barkhe and Derks have both been recently married and were recovered shortly after being taken out.

The Jefferson County Tragedy

Denver, May 26.—The coroner's jury which has been investigating the death of Young John Kennedy who last Saturday morning was assassinated while driving a team down the mountain side near his ranch in Jefferson county was completed at Morrison today. The verdict being that Kennedy was murdered from ambush. Charles Elliot was immediately arrested and is held in jail. The Elliots were at the inquest yesterday armed and heavily armed. They all deny knowing anything about the murder. They admit there was a feud between the two families and that the men had frequent quarrels. Kennedy was killed by buckshot fired from a gun and the Elliots swear they never have had such a gun in their possession.

A Mysterious Case

Denver, May 25.—A special to the News from Galena, Kan., says: Several days ago Mrs. Ella M. Kay left her home in this city to visit her sister. She was accompanied by her two children, a boy of 6 years and 9 months respectively. She had not been here very long when William Alcott also of this city appeared on the scene. He and Mrs. Kay were evidently on intimate terms. Sunday afternoon Alcott and Mrs. Kay went for a walk in the woods near town with Mrs. Kay's children. The children returned home but alone. The children said they had been lost in the woods and that their mother had left them. Alcott's team was seen in town that afternoon. The woman never returned. Alcott's team was found in the woods near where the children said they had been lost. The woman's body has not been found. Alcott is now in jail here. He says he left Mrs. Kay at her sister's in Galena and came home alone. He says he left her because she had decided to go to Denver to live with a married man who had been her lover. Mrs. Kay's sister says she was married to her husband in Denver and that he is living there now

The bungling attempt at train robbery in Maine was evidently the work of amateurs. There is neither glory nor profit in making a noise and shooting the express car full of holes, until the engineer pulls the train out of danger. We appreciate the ambition of Maine to make a stir in the world and get her name in the papers, but we cannot congratulate her on the success of her labors.

The latest Denver murder affords another illustration of the tendency which is becoming so common, for the citizen to take the execution of law into his own hands. The Italian was of course to blame who shed blood upon so slight an excuse, but was he any more guilty than they who needlessly started to take the execution of the law into their own hands and drove him to death in the river? It is no use trying to avoid the issue or play upon sympathy. The question must be fairly met. The mission of the law is to punish crime; if the law does not punish crime the duty of the citizen is not to punish crime but to enforce the law, or enforce its execution.

The Florida legislature has at last succeeded in electing a United States senator. The friends of Senator Call had a majority of the Democratic votes and the Democrats had, of course, a large majority in the assembly. Under these circumstances it would seem that his re-election was not only natural and unavoidable but that it would be very easy of accomplishment. However the Democrats were not satisfied with the way. A caucus was held and it was voted that no one should be the nominee of the caucus unless he received two-thirds of the votes. So day after day until nearly one hundred ballots had been taken these Democrats met in caucus and each time Senator Call had a majority and his chief opponent had nearly as many and a few were scattering. There was hardly any variation between the ballots, and at no time did the opponents of Senator Call have a reasonable chance of defeating him, or his friends of securing the necessary two-thirds. At last the Call men became wearied, adjourned the caucus by a vote of 49 to 47, and Senator Call was re-elected on the first ballot in the assembly of the legislature. Such proceedings as these are a burlesque on republican government, and unfortunately the Florida case is far from being the only manifestation of the spirit, though indeed it is seldom pushed to such an extremity. Too often these contests result in the selection of a man of distinctly inferior calibre, as nearly resulted in Illinois; too often they give rise to lifelong enmities and shatter political friendships as in Idaho; too often as in California and Florida, if they do not give rise to actual bribery they present those conditions in which bribery is most likely to flourish and where rumors of it are most likely to arise. Legislators who need body prolong a contest in which there is no good reason why any of them should change his mind, lay themselves open to the suspicion that they expect some other than a good reason for the difference in their opinion. In Florida the most evident loss was a great and entirely unnecessary waste of time and consequent expense. But it must not be forgotten that such an incident must result in a loss of dignity and a lowering of tone both in the estimation of legislators and people. It was the Democrats of the national house who set the example of refusing official duties for partisan ends, but whether in Washington or Tallahassee, Lincoln or Denver the principle needs to be established beyond question that the duty of legislators is to perform the public business as quickly and as well as they can. To secure party advantage; to spend as in Colorado, day after day in wrestling for the spoils of place; to show one's ability in oratory and political manoeuvre for no good purpose; to advance the personal ambitions of oneself and one's friends; these constitute too large a part of the work of our national and state legislatures. It is not for this that money is drawn by right from the state treasury to pay wages and clerk hire. Such legislators draw pay for work that they do not do. They dishonor them selves and cheat the state.

WOODLAND PARK ITEMS.

WOODLAND PARK, May 25, 1891.

The funeral of Walter Castello who died very suddenly at this place Saturday took place to-day in the church, Rev. Mr. Garrett of Denver delivering an impressive discourse. The remains were interred in the Woodland Park cemetery. The deceased had no relatives here and none but strangers followed him to his last resting place. Word was received from his brother, John Castello, who is in the regular army now at Fort Leavenworth, directing that the deceased be interred here.

Work on the new hotel and the water works is progressing favorably and it is expected that both will be completed by July 1.

The Crest hotel is crowded nowadays and the prospects are that there will be tourists and other visitors enough to fill both hotels by midsummer. The improvements being made to the place will certainly make our little town attractive to outsiders. W. PARK.

A Norwegian Girl's Good Fortune.

Just a sheet of paper in an envelope, sent from far across the seas! But it will transform Agnes Olsen, the fourteen-year old ward of E. J. Ewald, train dispatcher in the Southern Pacific railroad service, into an heiress of nobody knows how many big shining dollars. Here is the story:

A good many years ago a Norwegian by the name of Olsen married a girl of the name of Manning in Chicago, where they lived happily together until they decided to come to California, which was in 1879 or 1880. Olsen was a poor man and a cook by profession, but he often used to tell his wife, and later his children, that he had wealthy relatives in Norway, his native country.

About four years ago Mrs. Olsen died, and the father, being unable to properly care for the two children she left behind—Agnes, aged twelve, and a little brother, aged ten—gave them in charge of the Sister's Orphanage in Berkeley, where they received the necessary schooling. The girl, two years ago, was taken into the household of Mr. Ewald, in Alameda, where she is now, will lived and regarded as a member of the family.

Recently Olsen, the father, who lives in Oakland, received a letter from Norway informing him that one of his relatives had died and left a large amount of money to be divided among any children he might have. The letter is somewhat vague and contains but very meager information, and it is not known just how much wealth the Olsen children have so unexpectedly fallen heir to. The gossips of Alameda have during the last few days told any number of stories about Agnes Olsen's luck, and have mentioned sums ranging all the way from $1,000 to $150,000 as her portion of the Norwegian patrimony. Remarkable Bicycle Riding.

Emile Fredericks and J. H. Hill, a pair of clever local wheelmen, have from time to time astonished their friends with extraordinary and difficult bicycle riding. A favorite fun for these daring wheelmen is up the Northeastern or the Louisville and Nashville railroad. They stop at nothing, and although they both ride large ordinary wheels, spin over the different trestles with the coolness of tight rope walkers. The route is made between the tracks, and necessarily consists in bumping over the crossties, which are in a good many instances on the trestles from nine to ten inches apart.

The Northeastern bridge, which is in the neighborhood of eight miles long, has been crossed by them already this season, while on the Louisville and Nashville road they have crossed the various trestles as far as Pass Christian. Mr. Hill stated that the bridge at the Rigolets was one of the most difficult they had ever crossed. The ties are particularly far apart, while they are reported very slippery from oil. Mystifying the Parents.

Here is a very simple trick with pennies that will catch the sharpest of your friends:

Place six pennies on the table and arrange them in the form of a Roman cross that is, four pennies in a perpendicular row for the upright, and one on each side of the second penny for the crosspiece. You will then have two rows, the up and down row with four pennies in it and the horizontal row with three in it. Ask your friends to place them in two rows with four in a row by only changing the position of one penny.

They will try, but they won't succeed.

Then crush them by placing the lower penny of the perpendicular row on the center penny.

Of course you did not stipulate that the coins were not to be placed on top of one another, and you have done the trick fairly.

But it always lead to a dispute.—New York Herald.

He Offers a Cake.

A baker of this city is the ingenious inventor of a puzzle which, if placed upon the market, would be a dangerous rival to "pigs in clover." It is composed of two pieces of hard wood, about 12 inches long by 2 wide, joined together at right angles. At equal intervals on the upper surface there are four grooves or holes, also smooth cardboard. The object of the puzzle is to roll a marble over the two pieces of wood, dropping it into the holes in succession. A number of experts have tried the affair, but it still remains to be done, and the baker is out with an offer of a cream cake for the successful man.—Rockland (Me.) Free Press.

Easy Shoes.

"I was surprised," commented a shopper, "to notice the other day in a shoe shop a clerk selling to a fashionably dressed woman a pair of old fashioned lasting gaiters. I did not suppose they were kept nowadays in any but old ladies' sizes, and I so commented to the young woman when she came to serve me. 'Oh,' she said, 'ladies buy them often for an ocean trip. They are for use in case of emergency, as they are more substantial than ordinary bedroom slippers, yet are quite as easily adjusted.' And I realized that I had added a little to my store of knowledge."—New York Times.

A Device to Curve the Pitched Ball.

A Cleveland man has patented a device for giving a baseball the curve when it leaves the pitcher's hand. The device consists of an elastic strap with a loop in one end to receive the thumb, and at the other end is a segment of a sphere corresponding to the shape of the ball. It is claimed that as the ball leaves this arrangement any curve desired can be given, and without the employment of the contortions which the average pitcher has to make to reach the same result.—Philadelphia Record.

A Deathbed Answer.

When Thoreau lay on his deathbed a Calvinistic friend called to make inquiries regarding his soul. "Henry," he said anxiously, "have you made your peace with God?" "John," replied the dying naturalist in a whisper, "I didn't know that God and myself had quarreled!" San Francisco Argonaut.

REVOLUTIONARY CLUBS.

RIDPATH'S SKETCHES OF FRENCH POLITICAL SOCIETIES OF 1790.

Origin and Spread of the Club Movement in France—History of the Leading Organizations—Their Course Coincident with the Revolution Itself.

(Copyright, 1891, by American Press Association.)

THE real fountains of the great Revolution were in the club houses. It was among the political societies that every new project had its initiative. Between the years 1789 and 1791 it might be said that French history in all its leading features was the offspring of clubism. The states general itself if it had bankrupted for its father, had the club for its mother. Nearly all of the projects for the reform of French society were hatched in the clubs before they were announced in the assembly. Those sudden and serious movements of the French people which seem so incomprehensible to the modern reader were organized in secret in the political clubs before they were launched on the general wave. There the storming of the Bastile was planned, there the attack on the Tuileries was conceived, there the abolition of the monarchy was debated, and there the Terror had its birth.

One of the characteristics of human nature is to swarm. Man is not wholly gregarious, like the flocks, not wholly solitary, like the bear. Rather, like the bees, he works with his fellows in a social association, and sometimes swarms. Carlyle has noted and defined this disposition of our species under the name of "swarmery"—a sort of congregating, instinctive impulse that brings men into affiliation for certain ends, which perhaps they themselves do not understand.

Of this disposition the French furnish us the highest example. They outswarm any other race of the human kind, and their swarms are the most intense, the most numerous, the hottest. It was so preeminently in the great agitations preceding and attendant upon the French Revolution. The gregarious instinct became more active than ever before, and secret societies abounded in all parts of the kingdom. They nearly all had a political motive at the bottom. They were doubtless the result of three general causes: 1. The political conditions present at that time in France. 2. The effervescent and swarming dispositions of the French people. 3. The intellectual reaction which had been produced by the French philosophers of the preceding epoch notably by the writings of Jean Jacques Rousseau.

So far as we are able to discover, the first important club movement had its origin in Brittany. In that province a secret political society was formed before the calling of the states general. Of this club several of the Breton deputies were members, and by them the club organization was carried to Versailles at the opening of the states general. The society appears to have been a sort of political committee, the intent being at the first to see to it that only friends of liberty and reform should be chosen as deputies.

Such was the origin of the Breton club, or Breton committee, of which we hear much in connection with the history of the states general and national assembly. When the latter body was transferred to Paris the club went also as its shadow. By this time the organization had become powerful. Its usefulness as a means of originating and promoting legislation had been discovered. The reform members of the legislative, constituent and national assemblies must be always running across of evenings to meet their club, where, among their friends, they could throw off all disguises, all politic side movements, all little expediences and reveal their bottom purposes and plans. What a field for oratory and debate was here prepared! What a sell for revolution!

On reaching Paris the Breton club immediately provided itself with a place of assembly. This was found in the Rue St. Honoré. There stood the old convent of the Dominican friars, known as the Convent of St. Jacobus—a mediæval structure, spacious and gloomy enough, no longer of much use to man, but still of great use to history. Here the club established itself with the new name of La Societe des Amis de la Constitution—that is, Society of the Friends of the Constitution. But that name was too tedious for the lips of patriotism, and so, as the club grew and flourished and became powerful, and was spoken of by all men, they called it the Club of the Jacobins, or the Jacobins, for short. Such was the rise of that society which was destined to control the French Revolution, to give to it its form and features, and to impress itself upon the history not only of the current decade but of the Nineteenth century, even to the present day.

Great was the popularity of the Jacobins. Democracy was the prevailing spirit, but at first the spirit was restrained. The Friends of the Constitution, not yet knowing what they wanted, gave their support to the new liberalized and reformed monarchy which had been devised by the assembly under the inspiration of Mirabeau, and which was still believed to be good for the French nation. The conditions of membership in the club were easy. Any patriot who was vouched for and introduced by four members in good standing might be admitted on terms of equality with the rest. On his initiation he received a ticket which gave him all the rights, privileges and benefits of attendance, and participation in the debates and business of the club. The membership rapidly expanded and soon reached the number of 1,200. In eluding many delegates to the national assembly. The organization was perfected and made regular. The society had its presiding officers, its committees, its Journal des Debats, in which one to the present day may read the proceedings and speeches of the society.

The influence of the Jacobins rose rapidly, and soon became dominant over the Revolution. In this arena the strongest of the ground giants, those earth born Titans who were to reign for a season and then perish, displayed their powers and won the applause of all that mad patriotism which ran riot in the streets or dripped into the cellars of Paris. Here Mirabeau came, at intervals, to join in the discussion. Here that Robespierre, who was to be King of the Terror, rose first to power and then to omnipotence. Here the two Lameths, Barnave, Fouquier Tinville and Anacharsis Cloots, who shall presently introduce to the national assembly a body of representatives called the Human Race, all flourished and gained ascendency over the public mind. The assembly, and afterward the national convention, became only a kind of sounding board to catch the echoes from the platform of the Jacobins. Here audacity, adventure, the wild spirit of radicalism and innovation more and more took voice and heat from the applause of the unquenchable democracy that was rising from the soil of France.

Perceiving her power, the Mother Society—for by that name the Jacobin club was called—began to be a mother indeed. She procreated and established daughters like herself first in the principal cities, afterward in the minor cities of France until her liberal progeny numbered more than twelve hundred, all of them loyal to her will. These subordinate clubs followed the example of the mother club in clubism, spread everywhere, multiplied by the 40,000 subordinate societies were organized in the French towns and villages. The whole constituted an immense speaking gallery, resounding in every chamber and recess with the echoes and edicts of the great Mother.

In a short time the diverse sentiments in the Club of the Jacobins led to a division, in which there was a Center, a Left and a Right. The Left became more and more strongly revolutionary in its principles. The Center held on in the same line of agitation, insurrection and reform which the Revolution itself was pursuing. The Center was the Revolution. The Right drew back more and more toward constitutional monarchy. At length the Left, under the lead of Danton, Marat and Camille Desmoulins, broke off from the slow going Mother Society and organized a new club, more radical and furious than any society thus far established. The club secured as its meeting place the old chapel of the Franciscan friars, known as the Cordeliers, from the name of the cord with which the monks were wont to girdle themselves. Hence the new society was called the Club of the Cordeliers.

The meeting place was in the Rue de l'Ecole de Medicine, or, as we should say, Medical street. Here the extreme agitators gathered, and began to foment those questions which involved the destruction of the existing order of society. Here the malign genius, Jean Paul Marat, with his monstrous head and croaking voice, came up from underground Paris to pour out his invectives and sarcasms, streaked with blood. Here was established, under Camille Desmoulins, Le Vieux Cordelier, or The Old Cordelier, which became the mouthpiece of the frantic revolutionists, the organ of the approaching Terror.

In like manner the Right broke away, and was organized under the title of "Friends of the Monarchic Constitution." But that name soon gave place to the Feuillans club, so called, like the others, from the meeting place of the society, which was the convent of the Feuillans. Of this body the leaders and founders were the Abbé Sieyes, old Bailly, mayor of Paris, and our own Lafayette, with a few other conservatives, eminently respectable and strongly desirous of putting a brake on the wheels of the Revolution.

Still another great club was organized, called the Club des Monarchiens, or the Monarchists' Club, having for its object the preparation and maintenance of monarchical principles, and in particular the support of the tottering Bourbon throne. The break between the Royalist and semi Royalist societies on the one side and the Jacobins on the other tended strongly to increase the democracy of the latter, and to force the whole society over in the direction of the Cordeliers, so that sympathy, but not organic union, was re-established between such leaders as Robespierre, the Lameths, Danton and Marat—a sympathy fatal to the monarchy and ultimately destructive of itself.

Thus arose the clubs of Paris. More and more the Jacobins dominated all the rest. The Feuillans society waned, was mocked at for a season by the real revolutionists, and in March of 1791 was broken up by a mob. The Club of the Monarchists perished with the monarchy itself. The Cordeliers club reached its climax with the Terror, fluctuated as the Revolution itself waxed and fell, and was finally abolished by a decree of the convention in August of 1795. The Jacobins rose over all. There the storming of the Tuileries was planned, and there all the crises of the revolutionary tumult were arranged before they broke in public storm. Into the old hall of St. Jacobus the furious earth-born democracy of the Faubourgs and basements bubbled up, and sputtered in fire and foam and blood.

There the decrees were debated by which the ancient landmarks of civilization were obliterated; by which the old time calendar was stricken down, by which religion, with all its attendant circumstances and institutions, was kicked aside into the rubbish of the Middle Ages, by which Reason was raised and worshiped, and by which death was declared to be an eternal sleep. Not until the fall of Robespierre and his fellow despots of the Terror was the power of the Mother Society broken. Under that blow of reviving justice and liberty she staggered, first into obscurity and decadence, and then into death. The old hall of St. Jacobus was closed in November of 1794, and the Club of the Jacobins, that fearful engine of revolutionary ruin was no more.

JOHN CLARK RIDPATH.

HIS NAME IS J. ARMOY KNOX.

He Is a "Texas Siftings" Man, and Is Known Far and Wide.

The appellation of "the checkiest man in America" has for many years been jocularly applied to J. Armoy Knox by his intimate friends. Because of, or perhaps in spite of this characterization, Colonel Knox has got along well in the world. He was born in the North of Ireland, and at one time shone in the sewing machine business. The stories that have been told about him and the stories that he has told about himself would fill volumes. Most of them are so wonderful that the customary corrective grain of salt has no value.

J. ARMOY KNOX

Colonel Knox upon one occasion sent ex-Congressman Ochiltree a ticket to a lecture which he was about to deliver in New York for a charitable purpose, with the request that Colonel Ochiltree should remit the largest amount he could afford. The Texas lawmaker sent back the following reply:

MY DEAR KNOX—Bill Nye once told me that if he had my check he would have it stuffed. He said that it predominated above anything he had ever seen. Possibly he had never met you. When you next come to Texas I would like to meet you on some broad, expansive prairie and compare checks. Not that I expect to compete with you, but I have a morbid curiosity to know how you keep out of jail. Yours truly,

THOMAS P. OCHILTREE.

P. S.—I return your ticket.

Colonel Knox is about forty years old, and allied himself to the United States when he was a young man. He drifted about in one capacity and another until he got into the sewing machine business. Later on he met A. E. Sweet, and in 1881 Texas Siftings was started, and soon became one of the best known humorous publications in the country. It is said that Knox bought the paper for $600 and that as a starter it had a circulation of 250. Several years ago the publication office was moved to New York. Colonel Knox has written a number of plays, is a great traveler, and during the winter season is conspicuous as the wearer of a remarkable hat and a fur lined overcoat. As a humorist he has always been a success, but he is more proud of his business ability. He has all the contagious energy of an Irishman, combined with the stimulating influences of American life.

The Next Morning.

The night before had seen Trimkins in a very hilarious humor. When he awoke in the morning his brother asked him if he would like to see himself in a glass. He replied "Yes," and one of those convenient affairs that distort the counterance out of all approach to nature was produced. "Great Scott!" was the sick man's exclamation. Then after a pause he said, "Well, I look pretty bad I must say, but it isn't a shadow to the way I feel."—Washington Post.

Beds are quite an innovation in Russia, and so many will do for houses are still unprovided with them. Peasants sleep on the tops of their ovens, middle class people and serfs roll themselves up in sheepskins and lie down near stoves, while the rest lie upon wooden cots without bedding, and it is only within the last few years that students in schools have been allowed beds.

It is one of Joseph Jefferson's peculiarities to abhor the street passes. He never fastens one himself and doesn't want to be managed so. Whenever he goes to a large city Jefferson goes to the box office of the theater where he is to appear and spends from ten dollars to fifty dollars on tickets and distributes amongst his friends.

In illustration of Darwin's painstaking methods a friend of the great naturalist states that in one instance he employed a clerk for several weeks at an expense of fifty dollars in making investigations, and that the result was condensed into three lines in his great work on the "Variation of Animals."

Although an Englishman invented the postage stamp it was an American, James Bogardus who devised the best plan of printing the contemplated stamps. His device was selected by the British government in 1839 from 2,600 competing designs. Bogardus died in New York in 1874.

As a business property and one that is sure to bring large returns in the near future, there is no better location for the amount invested than to buy this corner at the price asked.

On North Tejon street we have an 8-room house; bath, hot and cold water, hot air furnace, two mantels and grates, electric lights, two hydrants in yard; good barn and well arranged; fine lawn and trees. The price of this valuable property is only $8000.

On Grant avenue, in West Colorado Springs, lot 50x150, new house of 6 rooms, fine lawn, nicely located for a home; easy terms. Call soon, as this place will sell quickly.

Also, at the southeast corner of Moreno and Cascade, lot 75x190 feet, an 8 room brick house, cellar, stable, very fine lawn, shrubbery and fruit trees; a good location for a boarding house or hotel. This is cheap at $5700.

Don't forget this lot, 84x220, with stone building 10x100, close to A., T. & S. F. tracks. Somebody will get a bargain, as it will surely be needed for warehouse purposes. The price is $3800, $1000 cash, balance easy payments, 8 per cent interest.

Here is a bargain sure: Lot 50x100 feet; next to corner of Uintah and Weber; worth more money now than we are asking. $2100.

On South Tejon street car line; lot 50x142; with 4-room house; lot worth the money asked—$1600, $300 cash, balance $25 per month, interest at 8 per cent per annum.

Lots in Ivywild are selling well, considering the times. You had better get one before the best are gone. The best of terms to those wishing to build.

BEADLE IN INDIANA.

THE CONSERVATISM OF RURAL REGIONS

How the Hoosier State Was Settled The Hill Regions Were First Occupied Beadle's Analysis of Hoosier Speech Paradigm of a Hoosier Verb

[Special Correspondence]

CARVION JUNCTION Ind May 21 — [illegible] of the time as I walked [illegible] views and talked [illegible] the most part however the rural population is still conservative and [illegible] which [illegible] Pennsylvania and the adjacent section of Ohio [illegible] all the improvements of the age and the increasing tendency of Americans to travel the Alleghany mountains still marks a well defined line between two strongly different varieties of our people I have crossed them in every parallel from New York down to where they sink into the submerged foothills of Alabama and everywhere I find the man of the eastern slope typically different from the man of the western slope while the man of the interior valleys differs from both The difference is at least in Virginia The traveler by rail does not note this because the lines are cut at long intervals but if he return to right or left at any station and walk until the first population he will find marked local types

Vincennes has three sets of people The old French type still shows in the red and the Pushmataha region is emphatically the land of vermin while in the Shenandoah valley the Scotch Irish English German population is like a prong from Pennsylvania thrust far into the south The man of the hills will think and look differently from the man of the plains just as the man who must live half the year under a roof will think differently from the man who can live all the year under the sky Even the "sandhiller" of North Carolina and the "cracker" of Cherokee Georgia are different from the Kentuckian and Tennessean in the hills of the western slope The Canadian Acadian original but a century has fixed the local types The "sandhiller" is a painfully serious citizen the Tennessean is decidedly humorous and so is the Kentuckian except he is restrained by a rather overgrown sense of personal dignity

From those three sections some 50 000 men came to southern Indiana between 1820 and 1840 Their grandchildren here are no more like them than the present Yankee of Connecticut is like the Puritan of 1640 When our cousins from the south visit us now we have to warn the children in advance to keep their faces straight while the visitor is talking The results have their humorous revenge When one of our boys visits his cousins in the highland south he is almost as much an curiosity as a Turk or a Chinaman "Any man who can't find his way across such an open country as this must be simple," was their frank comment when I got lost so often among their hills.

Naturally enough, the first emigrants located in the hilliest section of Indiana and it was not till 1835-40 that my own individual stock penetrated to the central Wabash region. From there to the Ohio the rich and expressive Hoosier dialect developed in all its marvelous beauty and flexibility. It is now heard only on the stage, but in my boyhood I heard little else and spoke it fluently, so let me rescue a few fragments before it passes forever to the limbo of the dead languages Its most marked peculiarity was that it followed the analogy of the French and Greek instead of Latin and English—that is, two negatives did not make an affirmative. The more negatives we got in, the more emphatic was the sentence Thus the newcomer looks at a work would ask the farmer.

"You don't know o'nobody what don't want to hire nobody to do nothin' nowhere around here, don't you?"

"No I don't."

"I reckon you hain't saw nobody from up the crick today?"

"No I hain't saw nobody."

They understood each other perfectly, and that is the real object of all language For "saw" in the foregoing put "seed," and you will have the Carolina variety of the dialect. I remember as if it were but yesterday the day our teacher told us we really must say "yellow" instead of "yaller," and "thirsty" instead of "dry." The parents unanimously approved of the first instruction, but thought the second was rather jaming too far, as our hired hand logically put it "If a feller that wants a drink ain't dry what in the imagination is he?" I reckon the master (teacher) wouldn't go a-firing to say he's wet, heh?" A few days later the "master" gave out the spelling "gimmattusses," and when many had attempted to spell it and failed, of course he gave out the word "potat."

The word had never heard, and when he told them that tomatoes and potatoes were analogous (of course he never used the word) it suddenly dawned upon several and for the first time, that English was a guide in speaking A sort of Irish Yankee scholar had strayed into the settlement and had his name was John McIlvaine If living, may his eye fall on this if otherwise, heaven rest his soul He nearly whaled the hide off us twice on occasions, but he taught us elements of our language.

Phonologically, the Hoosier dialect has sources—the very old English is preserved by the people of the south (such for instance as which is still good English) the Scotch terms of English and the peculiarities employed by the Pennsylvania Dutch as they learned to speak English These were German idioms literally translated into English, and such words should analogy to English words and were transferred bodily An old aged student of language threw up a form of conjugation with "to do" in this dialect. I know that "gone" implies past time, but "I done gone" the past perfect tense will appreciate the richness of meaning in this

VERBUM OF A HOOSIER VERB

Simple Regular as in English

I do, you do, he do, we do, you all do, they all do

I done, you done, he done it, etc

I done to do it etc

I done to gone does it, you done it, he done it, we done it, you all done it, they all done to gone do it

Intensive exaggeration We never quite so badly as that in Indiana We were crude enough Early in the common-school system we established and now Indiana has fewer native illiterates than any state save five. Then came the awful that iconoclastic war and a great broadening of thought came our Augustan age. Indiana boasts the most popular poet, the most widely read man and the most truly classical stamping the living of these three Nor I add that I refer to Whitcomb Riley, Professor Ridpath and General Lew Wallace? It is a long time yet before you will have your knapsacks packed for the encampment to be held at Detroit, Mich. but some of you are even now inquiring as to the best route.

If you will ask any ticket agent or hotel clerk for a folder containing a map of the Great Wabash route and will examine that map, you will see that this line offers inducements unequalled. For instance you will see that the Wabash can take you from either Kansas City or Council Bluffs by way of St. Louis and Chicago or Toledo, or via the direct air line straight to Detroit without change of cars.

THE GAZETTE.

WEDNESDAY MAY 27, 1891.

Two tramps were taken into the city jail this day—I will be tried in today's Police Court.

The postoffice will be closed on Saturday, observing Sunday hours, it being a legal holiday.

Mr. John J. Gilbegan, stenographer of the Eighth district court, is in the city for a visit.

Cricket practice will take place on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons on the new grounds at Broadmoor.

The excursion today of the Boswell church and Sunday school will be postponed on account of the bad weather of late.

The opening meeting of the Iron Hall lodge, which was to have been held on next Friday, has been postponed to June 5th.

The Colorado Midland contractors next Sunday will run their regular suburban service to be continued the coming season.

Masters & Daugherty Bros., builders and contractors, have erected a large and commodious office and shop near the bridge, foot of Huerfano street.

The president of the Fourth National bank of New York city, Mr. J. Edward Simmons, arrived at The Antlers yesterday accompanied by his family.

The burglar is still burglarizing in our midst, and while nothing very bad has been reported in the past few days amounts come in of his nightly attempts.

The county clerk issued marriage licenses yesterday to Lee Walker and Minnie S. Schumaker, Clarence Evans and Mrs. Phoebe Foote all of Colorado Springs.

The Children of St. Anne's Guild will hold a sale of fancy articles and refreshments at the Grace church rectory on Wednesday afternoon of May 27, from 3 to 6 o'clock. All are cordially invited.

At a regular meeting of Canton Colfax No. 2 held last evening, the following officers were installed for the ensuing year: Wm. Fowler, captain; W. P. Moffat lieutenant; J. R. Tyler, ensign; Nels Johnson clerk; L. Shrite accountant.

The next attraction at the opera house will be the New England comedy, "The County Fair," on Wednesday, June 3. The play is of the same school as the "Old Homestead" and is said to be brimfull of fun and with lots of excitement.

A warrant is out for the arrest of a man named Coleman, who is a stone cutter living on the east side. On complaint of Secretary F. B. Hill of the Humane society he is charged with maltreating Charlie Waghte, a boy who has lived with Coleman for some time.

Mr. H. H. Artz yesterday paid the fine of $100, and had him by Judge Campbell for attempting to bribe witnesses. Mr. Artz paid $200 and costs of the suit and gave notes, properly indorsed, for the remainder.

The College cadets will hold a shooting match next Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock. The place for the shoot has not yet been decided upon, but will probably be west of the city, near the Rapid Transit line, where a target will be set up at 150 yards distance. A gold medal will be given to the best shot.

Parties brought suit in Justice Farrar's court the other day over a tent worth about $5. The owner of the tent who had refused to give it up not only lost his case, but was obliged to pay costs amounting to $17.75. Justice Farrar thinks that the lesson taught by this case may prevent some people from bringing small suits into court.

Denver papers don't print it, but it seems to have some semblance of truth that when Mayor Shakespeare was in that city a reporter sought to get his views in regard to what Ignatius Donnelly says of him in his great cryptograph. [Evening Telegraph. That's all right, but the Gazette had an interview with him written by Bacon himself.

Nothing but the continued rains can prevent the Athletic club contest, next Saturday afternoon, from being a great success. A number of the business men have given medals to be presented to the winners in the various events. The contest takes place at the Athletic grounds and the gates will be open at 1 o'clock. The entries close on Thursday night.

At the Opera House.

In spite of the bad weather, the audience that turned out to witness Miss Hext's entertainment, in the opera house last night, for the benefit of the South Methodist Episcopal church, was not what could be called small, although it came quite far from being large.

Miss Hext has already won quite a reputation in Colorado Springs as an elocutionist, and her excellent recitations last night will greatly add to it. The trials of the eccentric Mr. Brown after having his hair cut for the first time in many weeks, and then again the more tragic piece entitled, "The Gipsy Flower Girl," produced a most favorable impression upon the audience.

Miss Evelyn Carrington sang a solo entitled, "Sweet the Angelus" with Mrs. Whitney as accompanist. The performance was extremely sweet, and places Miss Carrington among our leading amateurs.

"A Dream of Ancient Greece," which has been presented once before, was given with good effect, and the red and blue lights that were thrown upon the stage made a very striking picture as they lit up the statue like forms of the performers. The Shepherdess drill was given towards the close of the programme, and was led by Miss Hext and Miss Stella White. The movements were splendidly executed, some of them being very difficult and those who participated deserve much credit.

The college quartette, composed of Messrs. Haley, Goodale, Johnson and Bracewell, sang two songs very acceptably, receiving an encore on the last.

The entertainment was very creditable to Miss Hext and emphasizes what has been said before that she has a peculiar talent in that direction. The M. E. church, South, for the benefit of which the entertainment was given, will reap a good award.

Points for Housekeepers.

To avoid carpet moths—If you find no appearance of moths in your carpets as "course of prevention." In other words, after your carpet has been laid, sponge thoroughly in a strong solution of salt and water. It is well also to sprinkle it well with the carpet, in dark corners, under bookcases, behind, etc., where the sweeper is least used. Above all, keep your rooms sufficiently light, remembering that moths should be numbered among those wicked creatures who "prefer darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil."

Rusty chairs which have grown dark and discolored with age may be greatly improved by scrubbing with hot milk and salt, and afterward exposing to the sun and wind to dry.

In cleaning your pantry shelves use another "ounce of prevention." Sprinkle a mixture of powdered borax and pulverized alum underneath the papers, and you won't be likely to be troubled with ants.

A remedy highly recommended for the extermination of ants and mice is corn meal mixed with powdered glass. Spread the mixture in their favorite haunts, and it is claimed they will die from the effects in an incredibly short time.

Bad spots of oil or grease upon the carpet, which fail to yield to ordinary treatment, may often be removed with buckwheat flour and water. Make a stiff batter, spread upon the spots and allow it to dry. Sometimes more than one application will be necessary, but not unfrequently when the flour is swept off the spots will disappear with it.

Green spots upon wall paper may be removed with Fuller's earth. Make a thick paste, spread carefully upon the spots, and set it remain for twelve hours. Brush it off, and if the spot has not entirely disappeared, repeat the process.—Sara Seig, work in Good Housekeeping.

Mighty Because of Their Numbers.

Investigators have figured it out that the presence of big zoo visits certain portions of the United States once in seventeen years. Just now the swarming pests seem to be occupied elsewhere. Reports from Algeria say that they are travelling over the country in vast millions.
